He is discovered making violent love to the dancer and his wife informed. Every means is used to been him home, but he seeks the company of the fair dancer, until the wife threatens to take poison if he continues in this way. He treats the threat as a joke and pours the poison out into a glass and dares her to drink it. While at the dancing girl's private while at the dancing girl's private lunch he is served wine in a glass precisely like the one in which he poured the polson and he is filled with all corts of thoughts and hurries home to find his wife prostrate on the floor and he, thinking she has taken the poison, it overcome wife removes and goes in overcome with remorse and goes in-

A SUNDAY SERMON.

How is it with you at the end of the Is pride in your heart and is peace in your breast?
